Lead Teacher

Madison Collective School - Madison, WI

$35,000 - $60,000 a year

Madison Collective School is looking for a highly motivated, forward thinking educator to join our mission to foster creativity, collaboration, and purpose for all students. If you are ready to join in on the ground floor of this exciting new vision for education and are ready to re-think and re-imagine what education can offer you, your students, and our community - we want to hear from you.

Interested candidates should be...

- Able to work cooperatively with educators, students, families, and the community
- Knowledgeable about culturally relevant pedagogy, project-based learning, place-based education, arts integration, multi-age teaching, differentiation, and team teaching
- Lifelong learners and out-of-the-box thinkers

Madison Collective School is a collective microschool opening in 2019 for grades K-5 in Madison. It's aim is to foster high wellbeing through an education that is predicated on purpose and meaning in the lives of its students and their families and to develop the skills and confidence to be the change-makers of their generation. The educational model is inquiry-based and problem-focused learning (IQ-PBL), where to a large extent, students decide what projects and problems they want to tackle. Teachers provide scaffolding, guidance, and support, as well as monitor progress. Multiage classrooms provide continuity of role models and provide opportunities for students to explore different roles in leading and following at different times, and to routinely notice growth in themselves and their peers. Learning will take place outside the classroom as much as inside; moving, exploring the natural world and interacting with the community.

Qualifications:

Must be trained or be willing to be trained in the following models of instruction, including each of the following areas:

- Inquiry-based/Problem-focused/Project-based Learning
- Place-based Education
- Arts Integration
